

Do you think you would like to run your own business? Have you got what it takes? Has the cost of land and getting started made you think it will never be possible? Fed up with the narrow range of plants grown for garden centres? Well, this may be the opportunity that will change all that.

The owners of a successful business in West Sussex are considering ways of retiring from full-time physical work, without closing the nursery. They are looking to offer a Farm Business Tenancy to the right person (or people) to carry on the business of propagating and growing young nursery stock plants for a wide range of customers from wholesale nurseries to e-bay sellers.

They expect that the tenant(s) will have some formal education in horticulture and some years of experience in a responsible technical, supervisory or managerial position. They will be looking to make a very long-term personal and financial commitment to the future of the business. It is recognised that access to capital is limited for tenants and the terms of the FBT can be set to take account of this.
